orks, it could take an awful long time, especially when brute red 'Evil Twin', we take a different perspective to the attack.

Using a powerful long range wireless card (Afa AirUS036H4), we clone the target network to confuse our victim. Then, we deauthenticate the victim from his own wireless network and wait until he connects to our access point - which looks exactly like his. 🤪

When the victim connects, he is redirected to a service page asking for a key in order to access the internet. As soon as we get the key, you can bring the victim to use the network (maybe improvise some password or bring it down manually).

For this example I created a service page based on Verizon ISP. The files are placed at the default location (/var/www/). I created a database called 'wpa2', which can be done with the following commands:

mysql -u root -p
mysql> create database wpa2;
mysql> use wpa2;
mysql> create user 'wpa2'@localhost identified by 'wpa2';
mysql> grant all privileges on . to 'wpa2'@localhost;
mysql> flush privileges;

Finally, start apache and mysql services and check everything works, by going typing localhost on a web-browser.
